Pescadero Creek County Park

With 5,860 acres, Pescadero is by far the County’s largest park. It’s wilderness includes miles of trails for hikers and equestrians. Pescadero Creek Park shares its eastern boundary and a network of trails with Portola Redwoods State Park. The trail network also connects to Big Basin Redwoods State Park, offering the opportunity for long hikes through multiple parks.

Natural features

Pescadero Creek County Park includes a diversity of trees including coastal redwood, Douglas-fir, Santa Cruz cypress, California wax myrtle, tanoak, madrone, California laurel, big leaf maple, canyon live oak, coast live oak, and knobcone pine.

Activities and facilities

This park is largely undeveloped wilderness. Hikers, cyclists, and equestrians can access an extensive inter-park trail network from the Sam McDonald Ranger Station, Portola Trailhead, and at the Old Haul Road and Tarwater Trailheads. Cyclists may use a service road, Old Haul Road, which crosses the Park. Trail camps at Shaw Flat and Tarwater Flat are available for a fee on a drop-in basis for backpackers and cyclists who register with the ranger at Memorial Park. No water is available at trail camps. Backpack stoves are permitted in trail camps.

Sam McDonald County Park

Sam McDonald County Park offers magnificent redwood forests and a ride with vistas of the Pacific Ocean. The Park, some 850 acres, includes youth camps, an equestrian camp, and a hiker’s hut.

Natural features

Much of Sam McDonald is very steep. Ferns and other shade-loving plants are found in lower elevations; the higher-elevation knolls are covered each spring with colorful wildflowers such as sticky monkeyflower, wood rose, and sun cup.

The forests, dominated by coast redwood, also include Douglas-fir, madrone, California laurel, buckeye, big leaf maple, and oak trees.

Common wildlife in Sam McDonald includes black-tailed deer, raccoons, opossums, foxes, bobcats, woodpeckers, Steller’s jays, garter and gopher snakes, and banana slugs.

Heritage Grove offers visitors an opportunity to experience the stunning beauty of old-growth coast redwoods. Located on Alpine Creek, the grove includes what are considered to be among the Santa Cruz Mountain’s largest redwoods.

Activities and facilities

Several miles of trails for hikers, cyclists, and equestrians includes connections to adjacent parks. Trails in Heritage Grove wind through the redwoods. Heritage Grove Trail, open only to hikers, connects with other trails in the complex. The Grove can also be admired from the parking lot off Alpine Road, accessible from Pescadero Road.
